... Synopsis ...

"YANKEE MADNESS"

Richard Morton, a native of New Orleans, a young romantic American boy, saves a beautiful Spanish girl from bandits. He is intrigued by her beauty and the air of mystery that surrounds her. She will not tell him who she is except that her name is Dolores, and that she expects to leave for Sevilla, Central America, on the morrow,

Richard persuades his father, Robert Morton, that business calls him to Sevilla, and he follows Dolores. He finds the place in a state of revolution, and fired by his love for the girl and a spirit of patriotism, decided to take part. Pablo del Gardo, general of the army, and Rodolfo Emanon, a Spanish grandee, try to tempt Richard to head the general's forces, but Richard feels that his duty lies with the forces controlled by the President, Mr. Dominguez.

Richard gets an occasional glimpse of Dolores, but does not know yet who she is. She is ardently wooed by Rodolfo Emanon, but Richard feels instinctively that she does not love the Spaniard. Richard leads his little army to victory, and goes to acquaint Dolores with the good news. As he enters her home, he hears a cry, and discovers that Rodolfo is about to attack her. A terrific battle ensues between the two men, with Richard the victor.

He discovers that Dolores is no other than the daughter of President Dominguez, and the two find happiness in their mutual love.
